Venezuelan soldiers jailed, document says

CARACAS, VENEZUELA
Venezuela’s security forces have arrested at least 102 members of the armed forces for alleged crimes such as rebellion and abandonment of duty since a wave of protests began against President Nicolas Maduro’s government in early April, according to apparent military documents obtained by The Associated Press.

The majority of the soldiers are being held in Ramo Verde prison outside Caracas, according to the lists provided by an army official on the condition of anonymity.

While 13, including two army captains, were listed on charges of rebellion and treason, the large majority were reportedly being held for less serious offenses such as desertion, abandonment of duty and theft of military property that nonetheless point to a larger problem of indiscipline within the armed forces.

The lists appear to lend credence to claims that as Venezuela’s crisis deepens, the military is facing growing signs of doubt among soldiers. Maduro has been leaning on the armed forces to crush almost-daily protests that have left at least 90 people dead and hundreds injured or arrested.

All the soldiers were reportedly arrested before June 14, and it’s impossible from the registries to know details of any of the individual cases.

The AP could not independently verify the authenticity of the lists, but they came from a well-placed source.

The Defense Ministry didn’t reply to an email request seeking comment.

Publicly, there’s been little sign of dissent on the part of the top military brass. Maduro since taking office in 2013 has greatly expanded the military’s power, giving it control over the importation of food and key ministerial posts.

But cracks have started to appear, and many lower-ranking officers — and their extended families — are sharing the painful consequences of triple-digit inflation and widespread shortages.

In April, a lieutenant in a restive western state cut up his official military ID card as supporters cheered. Then three lieutenants publicly rejected Maduro as commander in chief and fled to Colombia.

The most dramatic incident occurred on June 27, when a police inspector stole a helicopter, fired on the supreme court and Interior Ministry buildings and posted videos on social media calling for a revolt among the security forces.

There have been no signs of any uprising in response, however, and the attack caused no damage or injuries.

Mexico prison fight leaves 28 dead

Associated Press

ACAPULCO, MEXICO
Fighting erupted between rival gangs inside a state prison before dawn Thursday, and 28 inmates were killed and three wounded, officials in the Pacific resort said.

Authorities had initially reported five deaths, but later raised the toll more bodies were found scattered throughout the prison.

Robert Alvarez Heredia, the Guerrero state security spokesman, said in a statement that the fighting broke out around 4 a.m. He said security forces later regained control and slowly began discovering bodies in a kitchen, a cell-block and other areas.

“The incident began because of the constant dispute between rival groups inside the prison,” Alvarez said.

State police said the prison population is more than 2,000.

A brawl between rival drug gangs at an overcrowded penitentiary in northern Mexico in February resulted in 49 inmates being killed, Mexico’s deadliest prison melee in years. That clash was between inmates aligned with the Zetas and Gulf drug cartels.

In June, Mexico’s governmental rights agency issued a report that said many of the country’s prisons are unsafe, overcrowded and understaffed. The report warned of insufficient staff, unsafe procedures and poor medical care at many facilities.

The National Human Rights Commission said it surveyed conditions at over 190 state, local and federal jails. It found that inmates often controlled some areas of prisons or had contraband inside.

Guerrero has been one of Mexico’s most violent states and the once-glamorous resort of Acapulco has struggled with a high number of killings.

Brazil ‘Car Wash’ task force shut down

SAO PAULO
Brazil’s federal police announced Thursday they are shutting down the primary task force assigned to a mammoth corruption investigation, drawing criticism from prosecutors who said it would undermine the probe. The investigation, known as “Operation Car Wash,” is Brazil’s largest-ever corruption probe. It has jailed top politicians and business executives and led to allegations against President Michel Temer.

Officers from the task force will be folded into an already existing division that investigates corruption, federal police said.

Coming just months after a reduction in the size of the task force, the elimination of the dedicated group of investigators has again raised concerns that authorities are trying to stifle the probe.

The decision means the officers will no longer focus exclusively on Car Wash cases. Prosecutors assigned to the probe called it “an obvious step backward,” saying investigators were already struggling to keep up with the workload.
