Kaira Mccalister, an 11th grader who either wants to become a vet or work with plants to ease overpop-ulation. “How do scientists on the ground help you do science on the ISS?”

“Food research is very important for us,” replied astronaut Arnold. “Our experiments are actually designed by scientists on the ground. Scientists in-clude professionals, uni-versity students, and also students at middle and high schools.”

For Kaira, it was a dream come true to speak to a real life astronaut, even if she doesn’t see herself being one someday.

“It was amazing, I never thought I would be able to talk to one,” she said. “I was shaking; I tried not to show it.”

The downlink lasted only 20 minutes, but that pre-cious time is something these students will always remember.

The astronauts even had time to joke with the stu-dents. Both Arnold and Feustel acted like kids themselves, spinning their microphone in zero gravity to the amusement of the crowd.

When asked about what food plant he would grow in the international space station, Arnold got some laughs by exclaiming if he had to pick one it would have to be a barbeque plant. He later said that any fresh fruit is something he looks forward to the most.

When asked about the biggest challenge he’s faced, Feustel shared some inspirational advice for high schoolers who lack confidence about their grades or feel lost when it comes to what they want their future to be.

“I would say one of the challenges I overcame were my grades in high school,” Feustel said. “I struggled and it was diffi-cult to stay focused. I went to community college after high school, got my grades up and eventually received my PhD, but my biggest challenge was getting my-self through high school and trying to do better as a student.”

Eleventh-grader Mat-thew Herrick said he took Feustel’s words to heart.

Matthew wants to be an astronaut and couldn’t wait to get out the door for the downlink — something he says doesn’t happen during a normal school day.

As someone who strug-gles with his grades, Mat-thew said he sometimes feels intimidated looking at all the achievements made by the astronauts. Knowing that Feustel also struggled in school makes him feel nothing’s impossible.

“It felt good to know someone wasn’t that great in high school like me,” Matthew said. “They have the same experiences and desires and if I just push past that. It’s just good to know they’re just like me.”
