stadium and then straight up to [head coach] Bobby Bowden’s office. Burt and Bobby would just shoot the breeze, talk and talk, and then there’d be a knock on the door. One of Bowden’s assistants: ‘Hey Bobby — the game is about to begin.’”

Jackson says the restaurant partnership came about when Reynolds was in Fort Lauderdale filming the movie “Stick” (an adaptation of an Elmore Leonard novel) and Reynolds’ helicopter flew over the spit of land with a shuttered restaurant at Port Everglades that Jackson was developing. Reynolds loved the property and got in touch with Jackson through a mutual friend. They met at Reynolds’ home in Jupiter. “He said, ‘I don’t know if you’re interested in having a partner, but if you are I’d like to be it,’” Jackson remembers.

He says Reynolds had 30 of his Hollywood friends fly in for the opening night (May 19, 1984) on the Caesars Palace private jet, but the actor’s local guest list for the opening was small, “just two or three people.” Among them: young Miami Dolphins quarterback Dan Marino (who brought a date named Claire Veazey, the first date for a couple that would go on to wed) and H. Wayne Huizenga.

Reynolds got felled by a kidney-stone attack that evening and did not make it to the opening, staying at his Pier 66 hotel room with future wife Loni Anderson. “Everyone was crushed that Burt didn’t make it, but Ricardo Montalban did his best ‘Corinthian leather’ bit and had everyone in stitches,” Jackson says.

Burt & Jack’s closed in 2002 and was razed and paved over in 2006. The site is now a restricted dock.

Jackson says he and Reynolds were “Christmas card friends” in later years, occasionally seeing each other. They “had a real nice time catching up” during their final visit in 2017, when Reynolds came to the Fort Lauderdale International Film Festival to accept a lifetime-achievement award.

Jackson is still in the restaurant business, having in 2017 opened the sophisticated Jackson’s Prime near Galt Ocean Mile. The menu features the same baked, stuffed lobster that used to be a staple at Burt & Jack’s.

“He told me that no matter where he traveled in the world people would come up to him and say how much they loved Burt & Jack’s,” Jackson says. “Burt was a movie star and known for his movies, but it never ceased to amaze him how many people had been to the restaurant.”
